The new prince, who Princess Marie just gave birth to, is the seventh successor to the throne in Denmark. The royal expert and historian, Jon Bloch Skipper, believes that the newborn prince will probably have a career in the military, although he can choose any other path of career. The reason why he believes that the newborn prince will choose a career in the military is because it has been a tradition in the royal family. Besides that Jon

Bloch Skipper also believes that there is a possibility that more from the royal family will choose higher educations. Another possibility is to follow their father's footsteps.

Jon Bloch Skipper underlines that it is important that the newborn prince finds a meaningful employment where he can act as an icon collection for the Danish population.

masqueraders from acting immoral. In a period of time it was even strictly forbidden to wear masks at the carnival in Venice. Still today many carnivals are held in February, which traditionally is the time of Lent (the word "carnival" means the equivalent of "goodbye to meat"). The carnivals in Venice, some parts of Germany and Holland are still celebrated in the European style.

The carnival certainly comes from a mix of cultures and still develops like this. It is a way to get in touch with our roots and a chance to get in touch with each other.
